game pc as standard equipment for dengenousgame. The computer had the required the 10k and 12k ROM (in it's case the 12k was from someone modding it) and the electronic assembly had 12k from the seller. (it was not a kit) and to make matters worse, as i have only had it for about 2 years (was actually an upgrade) and after working on it almost every single day for the last two years, it's started displaying a hash code.. ouch! the hash code is some obscure value, probably some internal checksum of some sort as the code came straight from the factory. before this issue, it was running a computerised chess game (battled against itself) on about 50/60 games per day. A: In your specific case, since the number only seems to happen in a certain sequence, it looks like the serial number may have been stored in the EEPROM, and the hash value is just a lookup table of the hex digits. Or maybe someone's been fooling around with it for a while and there's a large storage array of random numbers in the EEPROM. Either way, it's a fairly simple fix. Just erase the serial number and start over from scratch. I don't think you'll be able to restore the existing serial number without a hardware replacement, and even if you could, it wouldn't be the same game. Unfortunately, unless you have a service manual for the computer you are not going to be able to determine what the checksum is for. You can use the serial number to determine where to look for the hash value in the memory, but you will have to go to where the key will be stored in the circuit to find out what it is. 5th US Naval Hospital The 5th US Naval Hospital (5th U.S. Naval Hospital) was established by an act of Congress on May 26, 1854, in Washington D.C.
